

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Remembered Voices Announces Launch Date of February 21, 2010

NH tech startup bridges the generational voice mail gap

KENSINGTON NH, Feb. 15/da Vinci Group Inc. - Remembered Voices announces their Sunday launch of an archive system that allows you to create a voice recording for posterity, by phone and online; your friends and family can listen by phone and online – 24/7.

By phone, the system functions a bit like voice mail or an answering machine. You call, you leave a message, the recipient listens to your message. However, here's where things get interesting: you get much more recording time, and instead of unintentionally deleting or losing a particularly precious recording, it's saved. For five years. Or more. And any friend with a password gets to hear it, any time they want. Plus, you can record online, and your pals can listen by phone, and vice versa.

Here's an example. Using her telephone or cell phone, your great grandma calls the Remembered Voices 800 number and records a bedtime story, a recipe, and all about her childhood. Your brother, deployed halfway round the world, listens at 4 AM on his laptop. You listen at 5 PM through your cell phone. Four years later, all the kids suddenly have an interest in hearing about "the old days", especially when it's gran-mama doing the talking.

Remembered Voices gives you a way to save and create recordings in a long term archive, safely and reliably, with long term storage and repeated playback, any time and as many times as you want. You can convert old tape cassettes to MP3 and upload to a dedicated server, protected against viruses, power surges, fires, and drops in sound quality. What you record is up to you - your child's first words, your daily journal, the cat's purring.

Remembered Voices created their easy to use archive system with the intent to link generations with age appropriate technology. It's a pretty safe bet that even a computer illiterate fellow is calm and collected with a telephone – and his tech geek friends can easily listen to his recordings through their gizmos, once he gives them the access codes necessary to hear his reminiscences.
